

Novation Case Study for Captive Insurers

INFLATION IMPACT ON LEGACY LIABILITIES

Captive insurance companies, like traditional insurance carriers, have always kept a watchful eye on present and emerging risks that can threaten the adequacy of their legacy reserves. In recent months, one particular emerging risk has been gaining significant attention—Inflation.

Inflation has been suppressed at artificially low levels for so long that many captive managers have grown accustomed to ignoring its potential impact. However, suddenly, inflation has come into focus once again.

Due to the compounding effect of inflation over time, its impact on captive legacy reserves can be significant. The exhibit below (using National Council on Compensation Insurance (NCCI) payout factors) shows the effects of a 2% inflation shock on a sample portfolio. The difference between expected reserves and post-inflation reserves is shown in the heat map and demonstrates the degree to which the two can diverge. Reserve increases are required for all years, with the greatest deviation from expected occurring in 2014, 2015 and 2016. Furthermore, additional risk factors, such as adverse development, will be exacerbated as a result of higher underlying reserve estimates.

At the end of the day, managing inflation risk should be on the minds of all risk managers, and legacy liability products can help mitigate the potential impact of inflation and other risks impacting tail reserve risk.

Novation Case Study–Group Captive

Delivered financial closure to a captive client from multiple decades of liability exposure by structuring and executing a large novation of prior-year liabilities from the captive to third-party legacy reinsurance markets. This innovative transaction terminated the captive’s liability from potential adverse developments from ~20 prior years of workers compensation (WC), automobile liability (AL) and general liability (GL) business written, and simultaneously transferred and eliminated the client’s obligation to post a few hundred million dollars of collateral (to a third party).

Motivations

- Free up trapped capital.
- Decrease operational overhead.
- Reduce the impact of inflation on their legacy reserves.

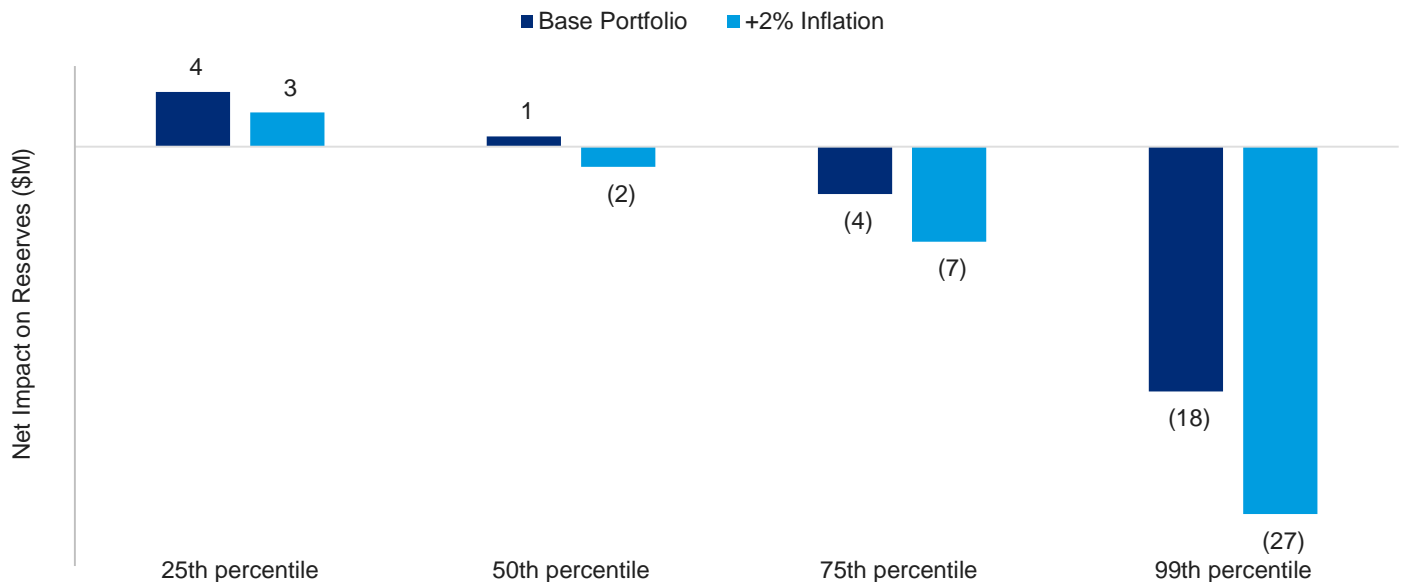

Benefits

- Released approximately USD 18.5 million in reserves and USD 2 million of capital for the group members.
- Eliminated all future collateral obligations for novated years.
- Removed inflation risk.

The exhibit below demonstrates how a 2% “inflation shock” could negatively impact a group captive’s ultimate reserves at multiple confidence levels.
